DUCK SHOOTING FROM A BLIND.

The duck hunters have been having great sport ever since the seaso opened, according to reports from the Chesapeake, Long Island sound and the bays along the New Jersey coast. There are several modes of getting within killing distance of the wary waterfowl, and all are more or less strenuous and uncomfortable. Shooting from behind a brush blind is per haps the most common practice. This is what the fellows in the picture are doing. Off to the right where you cannot see them, but in plain sight of any ducks that may happen to be flying over, they have anchored their decoys, and now they are ready to wing the canvasbacks.
